EQUATORIAL GUINEA CALLS FOR END TO DELAYS ON UNESCO-OBIANG LIFE SCIENCES PRIZE

Foreign Minister Reminds UN General Assembly of Country's Humanitarian Aid Efforts

NEW YORK (September 29, 2010) – Pastor Micha Ondo Bile, the Republic of Equatorial Guinea's (República de Guinea Ecuatorial) Minister for Foreign Affairs, International Cooperation and Francophonie, has called on UNESCO to proceed with the Obiang Nguema Mbasogo International Prize for Life Sciences Research before the 65th Session of the United Nations General Assembly. Minister Ondo Bile reinforced Equatorial Guinea's longstanding commitment to humanitarian aid and the prize's purpose to lessen the suffering of peoples worldwide, particularly in Africa.

During his speech, Minister Ondo Bile said: "The people and the Government of Equatorial Guinea believe that this is the appropriate time and place to once again express its deep concern for the unfair and irresponsible attitude of certain figures and NGOs working against the laudable and humanitarian initiative to create the UNESCO-Obiang Nguema Mbasogo prize to motivate and encourage action by the world's scientists in scientific research for the conservation of life."

Minister Ondo Bile called on UNESCO to "without further delay, materialize the UNESCO-Obiang Nguema Mbasogo international prize for research in life sciences" in accordance with the decision which was adopted unanimously by all Member States of the Executive Board of UNESCO in October 2008. Further, Minister Ondo Bile reminded the Assembly that "this contribution of USD $3 million, is directed at the international scientific community and aims to find solutions and remedies to the major pandemics and diseases that plague the world today in general and, particularly, the African Continent."

As a part his speech, Minister Ondo Bile recounted Equatorial Guinea's record of humanitarian contributions to countries experiencing hardships, from natural disasters and economic crises, including:

- Union of Soviet Socialist Republic (for the Chernobyl accident in 1986)
- Federal Republic of Nigeria (for the oil pipeline explosion in the town of Jesse 1998)
- Republic of Cameroon (for the Naos Volcanic Eruption)
- Central African Republic (for aid of its economic crisis 2003-2004)
- Niger (for the famine in 2007)
- Democratic People's Republic of Korea (for the support of its economic crisis)
- United States (for Hurricane Katrina)
- Republic of Cuba (for the effects of hurricanes in 2008)
- Republic of Bangladesh (for the tsunami disaster)
- Republic of Haiti (for hurricanes and floods in 2008 and 2010)

- Republic of Sao Tome and Principe (for economic crisis)
- Republic of Algeria Democratic and Popular (earthquakes in 2005)

The Foreign Minister further questioned the motivation of UNESCO to delay the Obiang Nguema Mbasogo prize, considering that despite (1) the great need that exists in the international scientific community; (2) its potential to alleviate the suffering of vulnerable communities, particularly in Africa; (3) having been duly approved by Member States that make up the Executive Board of UNESCO; and (4) the unanimous decision of Members of the International Committee on the Award to name three international scientists as winners (mostly from developing countries), the prize still remains blocked today.

Most recently, as part of Equatorial Guinea's efforts to improve health in the country and promote scientific research on the African Continent, President Obiang announced the donation of USD$1.5 million from the Government of Equatorial Guinea to the World Health Organization, as well as the delivery of a headquarters facility for the organization to expand its work in the country. President Obiang also recently signed an agreement with the African Union for the creation and installation of the first Headquarters of the African Center for Science, Technology and Innovation in Equatorial Guinea.

About the UNESCO-Obiang Nguema Mbasogo International Prize for Research in the Life Sciences: The UNESCO Executive Board has approved and will soon award the UNESCO-Obiang Nguema Mbasogo International Prize for Research in the Life Sciences, an award sponsored by the President of the Republic of Equatorial Guinea (República de Guinea Ecuatorial), Teodoro Obiang Nguema Mbasogo, and supported by the international community, particularly African nations. The award aims to reward projects and activities by a person, group, scientific institution, or other entity or organization that has contributed, through research, to the improvement of the quality of human life. The award, which will be worth $300,000, will be awarded once a year for an initial period of five years. The initiative arose as a personal proposal of the President of the Republic of Equatorial Guinea (República de Guinea Ecuatorial) during his speech at the General Conference of UNESCO in October 2007. It is a part of the efforts the Government of Equatorial Guinea is making to contribute to the global community and advance the welfare of the citizens of its country.

About Equatorial Guinea

The Republic of Equatorial Guinea (República de Guinea Ecuatorial) is the only Spanish-speaking country in Africa, and one of the smallest nations on the continent. In the late-1990s, American companies helped discover the country's oil and natural gas resources, which only within the last five years began contributing to the global energy supply. Equatorial Guinea is now working to serve as a pillar of stability and security in its region of West Central Africa. The country will host the 2011 Summit of the African Union. On 30 September, Abkhazia celebrates its 17th Victory and Independence Day. This year's commemoration is especially poignant in light of the passing in March of the Father of Abkhaz Independence and its first President, Vladislav Ardzinba. President Ardzinba wanted a collective freedom for all Abkhaz citizens, and we today continue working to fulfill his dream.

There is much promise in our country. We are refurbishing our infrastructure, improving our schools and healthcare, and building a growing economy around tourism and agriculture. There remain some who wish to isolate Abkhazia, to cut us off from with the rest of the world. Such thinking is short-sighted and dangerous, encouraging a continuation of the hostile environment that Georgia has forced upon Abkhaz citizens for almost two decades. Fortunately, a growing number of leaders are calling for engagement with Abkhazia, which represents a productive approach to resolving the tensions in this region and a better life for all. We hope that others will consider this philosophy of engagement not as capitulation, but a catalyst for regional freedom, just as President Ardzinba wanted for Abkhazia.

On this special day, I call on all Abkhaz citizens to join their Government in continuing the quest of Vladislav Ardzinba for collective freedom and to work to assure that Abkhazia remains independent from any nation. Our future is bright, and we now have the opportunity to mold our own destiny. President Ardzinba's vision is culminating day by day, and that can only be good for all who live in our beautiful and free Country. - Sergei Bagapsh, President, the Republic of Abkhazia
